Margaret Ann Fitzpatrick-Hanly's new book
JANE AUSTEN: Sibling Rivalry, Unconscious Fantasy and Change
IPBooks (2019)

“Margaret Ann Fitzpatrick Hanly has given us a wonderful gift with this book, a study of sibling rivalry unconscious fantasy and change in Jane Austen’s six great novels. With her background as an Austin scholar and as an experienced and highly respected clinical psychoanalyst, she is uniquely qualified to bring together psychoanalytic concepts and literary understandings of these great works of literature. She focuses on the inner lives and unconscious fantasies of Austen’s familiar characters—their intense sibling rivalries, triangular jealousies, family dynamics, their dreams and loves and the effects of early and often not completely mourned losses.”
—Nancy Kulish, PhD

Margaret Ann Fitzpatrick-Hanly is a psychoanalyst in private practice in Toronto, Canada, Director of the Toronto Institute of Psychoanalysis. She is Chair of the IPA Committee on Clinical Observation, Treasurer, Board of Directors of the Psychoanalytic Quarterly and on the Editorial Board of the IJP.

Austen’s plots and language dramatize the love and mutual identifications, the jealousy and competitive strivings of family life as young women and men fall in love and marry. Austen’s narrative method, free indirect discourse, presents the conflicted feelings and impulses of her heroines and heroes, as they separate from their families, relive early sibling and oedipal rivalries, and form attachments outside the family. —from the introduction by the author.
